

UK: 1967 Ltd v. British Sky Broadcasting Ltd.,
High Court of England and Wales, Chancery
Division, Case No.: HC14C02952, 23 October
2014

Kluwer Copyright Blog
June 21, 2015

Stavroula Karapapa (University of Reading)

Please refer to this post as: Stavroula Karapapa, 'UK: 1967 Ltd v. British Sky Broadcasting Ltd., High Court of England and Wales, Chancery Division, Case No.: HC14C02952, 23 October 2014', Kluwer Copyright Blog, June 21, 2015, <http://copyrightblog.kluweriplaw.com/2015/06/21/uk-1967-ltd-v-british-sky-broadcasting-ltd-high-court-of-engl-and-wales-chancery-division-case-no-hc14c02952-23-october-2014/>

This case concerned blocking orders pursuant to s97A of the Copyright Designs and Patents Act 1988 (CDPA). The Court found that there was copyright infringement by both UK users and operators of file-sharing websites, insofar as there was communication of copyright works, the communication was to the public, and the act of communication took place in the UK. This was the case not only for the websites that allowed users to upload torrent files but also for those that only aggregated links to torrent files on other websites. Further, the operators of the websites were also held to authorise the infringing acts of their UK users and to be jointly liable for infringements by the users. The Court consequently granted the blocking orders sought.

A full summary of this case has been published on Kluwer IP Law